How do I find a counselor or therapist I like?

You can search on psychology today, your insurance provider (e.g. lifewise), or other places to find someone you think will suit your needs. You can often filter by issues you want to discuss (e.g. relationships), gender, degree, location, or areas of expertise (e.g. race- or LGBTQ-informed).

It's also totally OK to try a few before you find the one you like. You don't have to stay with the first person you make an appointment with! Find someone who makes you feel comfortable.

Should I try therapy?

Almost anyone can benefit from talking to someone. It doesn't mean you're broken, or there's anything wrong with you! Therapy can be a useful way to just talk through things going on in your life with an impartial helper.

Therapists can also help with medical diagnoses or neurological differences. If you think you want someone who can help with these types of issues, make sure to look for a psychiatrist, which is a certification that includes a medical degree.

But it's not always for everyone! Mindfulness, life coaching resources, and support networks can also help support mental health

What certification do I look for?

Therapy

- A psychologist has a doctoral degree (PhD or PsyD)
- A LMHC has a master's degree in counseling;
- A LICSW has a master's degree in clinical social work
- A LMFT has a master's degree and specializes in work with couples and families

Medication management

- A psychiatrist has a medical degree and can prescribe medication
- A psychiatry nurse practitioner has a master's degree in nursing and can prescribe medication

What does it cost?

The counseling center and Hall Health are free for students.

Using GAIP (graduate student RAVTA insurance) you will be responsible for 10% of the cost per session for in-network providers and 20% of the cost per session for out-of-network providers.

Some professionals offer sliding scale or low-cost options, which may be an option if you don't have coverage.
